EXPLANATIONS.

In this dictionary the syllabic accent is marked by the sign ('), whenever it is on any other syllable than the first; where there is no accent-sign the accent is always on the first syllable.

When the accent-sign is placed after a vowel, this vowel is long; when after a consonant, the preceding vowel is short: when there is no accent-sign, the accented vowel is long, when ending the word or followed by only one consonant; short, when followed by more than one.

The accentuation of English words is not marked here, except when the similarity between the English and the Danish word might lead to a false accentuation, as in Ufcent' ac'cent.

As to pronunciation, little more has been attempted than to mark the different sounds of accented e and ø — the pronunciation of the other vowels being comparatively uniform.

Æ, when long, takes a sound rather similar to the English a in ale, only a little less open and without the «vanish» in e, generally heard in the English vowel; as in Mæn, Begre'b. Exceptionally it takes the sound of æ (something like the English a in care); this is marked by [æ] after the word, as in tjene [æ], bed're [æ].

É, when short, has the sound as the English e in set, as in Æst, men, beret'te. Occasionally it takes the sound of the long e described above (only short); this is marked by [é] after the word, as in Æbt [é]; the same sound generally occurs (though not marked here) in the neuter of adjectives and the participle of verbs with a long e, as in feb, n feb [é], ber'e de part berebt [é].

Ö, when long, has an intermediate sound between the English vowels in toe and too, as in bo, formo'de, Ho'rn. Exceptionally it takes the sound of aa (English o in more); this is marked by [aa] after the word, as in o'tte [aa].

Ó, when short, has the sound of English o in not (only a little less open), as in Røft (food), not', befol'te. Exceptionally it takes the sound of the long ø described above (only short); this is marked here by [ó] after the word, as in Røft [ó] (broom).

The inflection of compounds is not given here, as they follow their originals.

Whenever no conjugation of single verbs is given, they conjugate in the regular way, by adding -de to the infinitive in the imperfect tense, and -t in the participle (corresponding to the English regular conjugation in -d).

Like as English adjectives form their adverbs by adding -ly, so in general do Danish by adding -t. Consequently, to save space, such adverbs as a rule are not given in this dictionary.
